SOVIETS TO INITIATE SATELLITE PHOTOTELEGRAPHY IN 1977. The Soviets plan to introduce "into industrial operation" in 1977 the transmission of "central" newspapers by satellite phototelegraphy using the Molniya communications satellites.

The Soviets say the transmission of Pravda, Izvestiya, Selskaya Zhizn and other newspapers will require only about two hours instead of the 12 hours needed for trans-continental cable. The equipment, "Gazeta 2-SK," is currently undergoing tests in Khabarovsk. The process is said to have been completely automated and the transmission will be done simultaneously with television programs on a separate channel.
